Bombing trial

Prosecutors ask appeals court to keep bombing trial in Boston

Federal prosecutors want the Boston Marathon bombing suspect's trial to go forward in the city where the deadly 2013 attack took place, saying that defense attorneys had not made a case for moving it.

Their argument came in a court filing two days before a three-member panel of the First Circuit Court of Appeals are to set to hear arguments by lawyers for Dzhokhar Tsarnaev to move the trial.

U.S. District Judge George O'Toole has three times rejected similar requests.

Jury selection began early last month when 1,350 people were summoned to the courthouse to fill out questionnaires about their connection to the case. Close to 200 have since been called in for in-person questioning. REUTERS

Commute

Baker hopes for quicker T solution

With commuters struggling daily with delays and cancellations on public transit, Gov. Charlie Baker on Tuesday said predictions that it could take a month after the final snow event to fully restore MBTA service are being viewed by his team as an "outer limit."

"I think we need to be faster than that, but I don't want anyone overpromising and under-delivering," Baker said. "Our goal is to work collaboratively with them to do what we can to get different parts of the system online as soon as possible."

As another work week started Tuesday with MBTA and commuter rail riders fighting to navigate a patchwork system of shuttle buses, trains and trolleys, which in some cases were still closed, Baker said his administration has moved into triage mode, suggesting broader conversations about how to fix the transit system for the long-term could wait.

"Our focus at this point is literally what have you done today and what are you going to do tomorrow and how fast can we expect to see people in a situation that they consider to be, sort of, normal," Baker said. SHNS

More snow days: Yay? Or no way?

Snowed out.
Boston-area kids are either going stir crazy or can't get enough of snow days.

For the past few weeks, schoolchildren in Boston and its surrounding suburbs have enjoyed every kid's dream — snow day after snow day after snow day — and now, February vacation.

But what's heaven for children is for some parents, hell. Or at least purgatory.

"We've had two snow days a week for the past three weeks, and now they have vacation," said Winchester mother and former Boston University Academy teacher Sasha Lyons. "It's been a big distraction for them. It's really hard to get them back on schedule when everything is constantly up in the air."

Her 9-year-old twins, a boy and a girl, have been struggling with ways to amuse themselves.

"One day my son spent time playing video games in the morning, then had a sobbing fit because he felt like he was wasting his snow day. He didn't know what to do," Lyons said.

As schools across the Commonwealth struggle to figure out how to cap the school year at June 30, Lyons is holding out hope that her kids have seen the last snow day of the season. Her kids are over it too.

"My daughter was saying, 'I really wish we didn't have another snow day,'" said Lyons, adding that she agrees with the school systems' need to close.

But 9-year-old Gabriel Niswonger, also of Winchester, can't get enough free time to enjoy the winter weather. He keeps occupied with his two siblings by sledding, shoveling and helping his mother Hannah in her home art studio.

"I like the snow," said Gabriel, who is in 6th grade. "We are mostly sledding, playing snow football with our friends, and doing other snow things. I'm not afraid of the cold," he said, adding, "I think it's very beautiful when it's snowing."

Hannah, a sculptor, hasn't minded the extra time with her kids.

"We're really happy, but my husband usually bikes or takes the train to work. So right now he is not a happy camper," Hannah. "The funniest snow moment so far was when I looked out my window one morning after one of the blizzards, and said, 'Oh look, more snow,' and he just looked at me and said, 'No.' He's had it."

Weigh in

Should additional snow days be required, Boston Mayor Marty Walsh and Superintendent John McDonough have said that Bunker Hill Day, June 17 would be added to the school year.

- Boston Public Schools will hold school on Evacuation Day, March 17, making its last day of school Tuesday, June 30.
- Teacher union agreements prevent teachers from working past that date.
- Additional dates beyond this one are still being considered, according to the Boston Public School System.
- Residents can vote on how to handle the matter at BostonpPublicSchools.org.

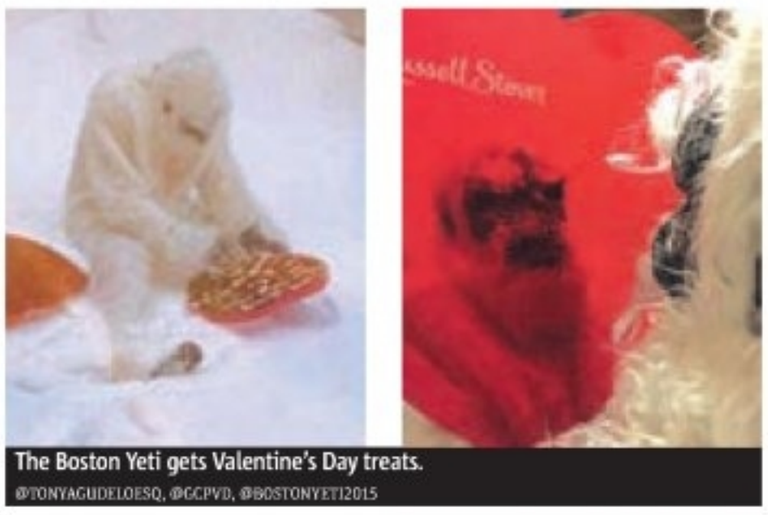
Some questions for the Boston Yeti

The yeti speaks. We listen to the city's favorite winter cryptid.



The Boston Yeti gets Valentine's Day treats.
@TONYAGUDELOESQ, @GCPVD, @BOSTONYETI2015

He may have been the only silver lining in Boston's recent transformation into the fictional ice planet of Hoth. He was seen shoveling out cars and walking in various parts of greater Boston. He has more than 8,000 Twitter followers and made national news.

We got a hold of the Boston Yeti and asked him about the weather, the T and his impostor. Turns out the dude loves positivity and, no, he wouldn't tell us his real name.

Are you sick of the snow?
I wouldn't say I'm sick of it. There's much romance and wonder in snow. That said, I do hope for a break from the snowfall so that Bostonians can shovel out. I'd also really like to see local business open back up and get back to normal. So many people in our state have been impacted negatively by this weather. I think we would all agree that everyone deserves a snow vacation.

You've apparently inspired a copycat yeti. What do you make of that?
Well, as they say, imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. If I can inspire those to embrace the brighter side of our unfortunate weather situation, and in turn spread the smiles even farther, then I have no issue!

What made you do this?
A perfect storm of loving the outdoors [particularly windy, snow nights] and loving people. This city is percolating with good people, animals, and organizations. [For example: Snowcrew, a local organization that organizes volunteers to help shovel out those who are unable to.] I'm just trying to stamp my oversize footprint on the larger story.

Why keep your identity under wraps?
My identity is irrelevant. The real focus should be on remembering that weather and things we choose to follow on social media needn't always be negative. If I'm able to somehow embody positivity for even just one person impacted by our unprecedented weather, then I've done my job.

In that case, what can you tell us about yourself? Where are you from? Age? Work?
That's an easy question: I'm the one, the only Boston Yeti.

How long have you had the yeti suit?
What suit?

What do you make of all your Twitter followers you have and the media attention you've received?
I think it's all quite fun and flattering. Everyone has been sending the positivity back in my direction which I greatly appreciate. I never expected I would make so many friends in such a short amount of time. I appreciate each and every one of them — Yeti Nation continues to grow.

Any plans for the spring?
Great question! I've been thinking a lot about the spring. I would love to make my way to Fenway Park for a home game. I'm told by other forest-dwelling friends that there's quite a buzz in the air when the Boston Red Sox play at home. I'm wondering if they sell a vegan version of the Fenway frank. Do you know?

Any advice for folks looking to avoid cabin fever?
Try meditation! If that's not your thing then I would highly recommend puzzles. In our fast-paced world we're consumed by things that buzz, blink and beep. In my travels I rarely see someone not engaged with some kind of nifty electronic toy. We should consider getting back to the simpler things — the things we can engage with without a power source. Not to brag, but I'm known back in the forests as an avid puzzler.

The Boston Police Commissioner referred to you as Chewbacca. How does that make you feel?
It makes me feel great! I admire Chewbacca and all of his intergalactic adventures, though I do find myself to be easier to understand and slightly more articulate.

How did you spend Valentine's Day?
Wouldn't you know it I received a valentine from a secret admirer! I spent Valentines Day trekking through Somerville, Roxbury and Jamaica Plain trying to find the gift giver, but alas had no luck. Ah, mysteries are more fun anyway.

When are you going to fix the MBTA?
Well, I'm quite honored to hear that some of you think I possess such skills. I think the MBTA folks are doing the best they can under some very trying circumstances. I know more about forest dwelling and snow removal — so, I'll stick to what I know and let the pros do their job.

Where does the T go from here?

Rough ride. Officials argue the MBTA needs major repairs.

A former Massachusetts transportation secretary says the state should retire the bulk of the MBTA's debt to let the T make the infrastructure repairs needed to improve service.

Jim Aloisi, an attorney who served as the state's transportation chief under Gov. Deval Patrick in 2009, said the MBTA spends more than $400 million a year to pay debt holders.

"It's not sustainable," he said.

T riders will tell you that. On Monday, MBTA General Manager Beverly Scott said it will take 30 days for the transit system to recover from the snowpocalypse now burying Boston. Aging trains and track can't take the cold, the ice or the salt. Signals break down, stations are crumbling and too few cars are carrying too many people.

Scott herself is going out of service in April. She handed in her resignation last week.

State Sen. Thomas McGee (D-Lynn) is chairman of the Joint Committee on Transportation. He said the T is $9 billion in debt with a log-jam of $3 billion worth of maintenance and repairs.

"Statewide, transportation investment has been lacking," he told Metro recently. "The key to the economy is making these infrastructure improvements. That's a discussion we'll have to have. The T is really challenged."

Aloisi wants the state to assume both legacy debt and the T's share of debt from the over-budget Big Dig, saving the agency $250 million annually.

"They could start to use that to make the repairs they need to make and you don't have to raise a tax," he said.

The state would have to look elsewhere to pay for the debt. "It doesn't solve everything," he conceded.

The Pioneer Institute, a conservative Boston-based think tank, wants to place the agency in receivership, strip the MBTA board of its power and place strict controls on hiring.

Without cash, new management can't fix the MBTA, Aloisi said. "It's like hiring the best plumber but not giving him a toolbox," he said.

And the short-term solution to the T's woes?

"There's a limit to what you can do in the very, very short-term," he said. "You just have to depend on the good work of the good people who work at the T."

Aloisi said he issued a report back in 2009 that showed the T system needed $3 billion in repairs.

The fact that the T is antiquated is not new news, he said.

"The chickens have come home to roost," he said.

Acela

The T to the rescue

Former Boston Police Commissioner Ed Davis and hundreds of other passengers stuck on a disabled Amtrak Acela train Tuesday were rescued by the T, according to NBC News.

The Acela train, #2154, broke down 6 miles south of Providence, about 200 passengers boarded the MBTA commuter train, #818, via a gangplank and continued on to Boston.

"Get this," Davis tweeted. "Acela from DC is broken down outside Providence. We are being rescued by the T!"

Cops shoot Tewksbury school stabber

A man was shot dead by police Tuesday morning after stabbing two school workers at a career-training facility in Tewksbury.

District Attorney Marian Ryan said a man and a woman were stabbed in their car in the parking lot of The Salter School on Woburn Street around 9 a.m. after a man approached their vehicle and slashed their tires.

They are expected to survive.

The suspect, who was not named, wielded a knife and a BB gun. He was shot by police when he refused to follow their orders, Ryan said.

"The suspect was known to one of those individuals. We do know that he was observed in the parking lot fairly early this morning," Ryan said.

Hernandez. Towel found by ex-NFL star's alleged victim seen in video

A friend of Aaron Hernandez appeared in a surveillance video with a towel that was found near the body of a man the former New England Patriots star is accused of murdering in 2013, a defense attorney said on Tuesday.

Defense Attorney James Sultan asked North Attleborough Police Officer John Grim about footage taken at a gas station and convenience store hours before the body of semi-professional football player Odin Lloyd was found in an industrial park near Hernandez's Massachusetts house.

"Are you aware that there is video surveillance footage ... taken at about 2 a.m. on June 17, 2013, showing Carlos Ortiz with a white towel around his neck?" he asked during cross-examination of Grim, who said he was unaware of it.

Prosecutors say Ortiz was one of two friends who were with Hernandez when they picked up Lloyd at his Boston home on June 17, 2013, and drove him to the industrial area where his body was found later that day.

Aaron Hernandez pleaded not guilty to murder. / GETTY IMAGES

Investigators have testified they found a white towel on the ground near Lloyd's bullet-riddled body, which was discovered by a teenage jogger. Other items found near the body included a Red Sox hat, a marijuana cigarette and several empty shell casings from a .45-caliber handgun.

Sultan said the towel seen in the video was the one found near Lloyd's body. Lloyd, 27, had been dating Shaneah Jenkins, the sister of Hernandez's fiancée. REUTERS

1 Kardashians want Amber Rose to quit keeping up with them

GETTY IMAGES

What started out as some pretty decent shade-throwing by Amber Rose over rapper pal Tyga taking up with 17-year-old Kylie Jenner has broken out into an all-out Twitter war. And who doesn't love a good Twitter war? Rose first angered the Kardashian clan by telling Power 105 that Jenner is "a baby; she needs to go to bed at 7 o'clock and relax." Which doesn't seem like such terrible advice, but resident tallest Kardashian Khloe apparently took some offense, mounting a tweet-based offensive on Rose. "Please don't worry about my sister who has a career and her s— together at only 17. People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones. Please stop talking about us in interviews, mama. None of us talk about you." There were also some frog and coffee cup emojis thrown in, for some reason. This is huge, though, as it quite possibly marks the first time a Kardashian has ever asked someone not to pay attention to them.

Things are off to a messy start in the promotional run-up to Justin Bieber's much-hyped roasting by Kevin Hart and other comedy pros at the behest of Comedy Central next month. In the first video clip for the event, the Tiny Canadian Terror is pelted in slow motion with eggs, hearkening back to his previous arrest for doing the same to his neighbor's house last year. As the video teases, "Watch Justin Bieber learn how poor, defenseless houses feel." Also, can we do something about Bieber's apparent allergy to shirts? I know he put a lot of time into all those tattoos and wants to show them off, but still.

A shieldmaiden takes charge

"Vikings" returns Thursday at 10 p.m. on History. / JONATHAN HESSION, HISTORY

Interview. Katheryn Winnick says her Viking warrior will face some challenges as a woman in power on "Vikings."

The world of "Vikings" is one filled with violence, unpredictability and the constant threat of danger. It's also one in which Lagertha (Katheryn Winnick) manages to thrive, despite the rarity of a woman being in a position of power. Last season saw her go from main character Ragnar's wife to an abusive new marriage to a position of authority as earl of her own territory. This season will surely see her face plenty of new challenges, so we asked Katheryn Winnick about what's ahead for her.

Where do we find Lagertha in Season 3?
She has a lot more conflicts and struggles, now being a woman in power, but she's also a free woman, and she doesn't have a husband or an ex-husband to worry about, or an abusive husband. She got rid of him, stabbed him in the eye, one of my favorite scenes. So you will see her in a different light, which was a lot of fun for me to play.

Do the men she rules over in her territory accept her as their leader?
That's yet to be discovered, to be seen. I feel like she feels like she has the right to be an earl. I think her intention is doing the right thing for her territory, and she's such a moral character that I know that she will be a strong leader. How others take her authority is the question. It's probably very similar to women who are CEOs of companies today, and how to deal with a woman who is your boss. So that is something that will get explored a little bit.

I know the fans really want to see us get back together for sure. Are you trying to get spoilers out of me?

Always.
Ragnar is a very good-looking man and always will be, and Princess Aslaug — I think Lagertha has a lot of respect for her and what she's endured through her many children that she had to raise and is still raising and the struggles that she faces as the second wife to Ragnar. I think Lagertha really empathizes with her. Are you asking me if we're all going to end up in bed? I'm not going to answer that.

I guess you can't say yet.
I will tell you this. Lagertha has some fun this season.

Does that have anything to do with Ben Robson, who joins the cast as Kalf?
Hey, they cast a good-looking guy. Lagertha is a woman. I don't know, maybe there's something. You will see.

Twitter life

Web warrior

The show has an active fan base online. What's that like for you?
It's a little surreal, to be honest with you. It's overwhelming, especially the tattoos that people get of Lagertha's face. It's crazy. I get them at least once a week, someone tagging me on their latest tattoo of Lagertha, and I'm thinking, wow, this is dedication, this is amazing! And on the other hand, I'm thinking, I hope we don't get canceled! You're stuck with me for life! But I love it.

Do you hear from more men or women?
I would think it would be more women, but there are a lot of men. Some of the social media is like, marry me! Or I want to find a woman like Lagertha, or I want my daughter to be like you or like Lagertha. Men have really responded to a strong woman, which is so amazing, and a lot of girls and women relate to her, and that brings me so much pride and joy.

How to survive your roommates

For harmonious living, talk to your roomie about problems face to face. / ISTOCK

Living. Whether you're best friends or Craigslist acquaintances, sharing an apartment isn't always easy.

You know how it's definitely, absolutely, no-questions-asked rude to play music past 10 p.m.? And how everyone knows that cups should be placed upside down in the cabinet? Yes, well, these are arbitrary rules and preferences that you have amassed over the years, not infallible truths.

The first step to understanding your roommate is understanding yourself and recognizing what are legitimate deal breakers — and what are your own quirks you might have to adjust.

Communicate face to face

Texts can sound snippy. Emails can sound stuffy. Post-It notes can sound psychotic. If you can't deal with the way he flicks toothpaste all over the bathroom mirror, talk to him — face to face, human to human — about it. You'll be more polite when you have to experience his reaction, and he'll be more receptive when he sees your concern.

Passive-aggressive notes are the anonymous Internet comments of apartments: Normal people don't write them, and normal people don't respond to them.

Have a real relationship

Your roommate has seen your slobbery retainer, watched you cry at commercials, heard you have sex, and smelled you that time you didn't shower for three days. You have no choice but to have a disturbing amount of intimacy, so it's worth trying to round out the relationship. Have dinner together once in awhile, invite her out with your friends and get to know her as a person.

There's a good chance she'll accidentally see you naked someday — don't make this any weirder than it has to be.

Sleepovers

Conflicts about significant others are some of the most common — and ugly — roommate problems. For this, we called in an expert: author Anna Goldfarb, founder of dating blog Shmitten Kitten and ace advice columnist for The Frisky. Here are her top tips.

- Be up front about what's acceptable and what's not. "Have a hookup charter," recommends Goldfarb. "Agree upon times that dates come over, maximum overnight stays and the consequences if someone breaks it."
- What you do in the bedroom is your own business, but respect common areas when it comes to date night. "You can't take over the kitchen finessing your scallop noodles for four hours," she says. "And don't do movie marathons on the couch, covered in blankets — this isn't your bunker."
- Above all, have some basic manners when you have a guest over and remember that sharing is caring. "Always share the food and the booze," she says. "It makes everyone forget about inconveniences."

Elegance in motion on the runway

Reviews

Donna Karan

"The glamour of the NYC skyline" informed Donna Karan's fall show — doesn't it always? Yet, Karan brought new life to city-slicker basics, imbuing her hard chic with romance: tuxedo shirts with blouson sleeves, pinstripe pencil skirts spliced with silk chiffon insets and fabulous, swinging topcoats in rich gold brocade. RAQUEL LANERI

Tommy Hilfiger

For Tommy Hilfiger's 30th anniversary show, the designer declared his love for '70s style icon Ali MacGraw and football — on a fun, "Friday Night Lights" set. The results: preppy varsity sweaters, swingy kick pleat skirts and dresses with athletic stripes. But MVP goes to the outerwear, specifically the glam winter white faux-fur coats. TINA CHADHA

Rag & Bone

Rag & Bone knows we just want to stay in our pajamas. Models in lacy slip dresses layered over long sleeve tees and ankle-length pants stormed the runway. Sound too flimsy for the cold? Tough outerwear like shiny Missy Elliott-esque puffers (the designers cite '90s hip-hop as inspiration) are a city girl's protective armor. TC

Zac Posen

Posen's disparate muses for fall included Grace Kelly and Chaka Khan — and, you know, his collection actually did capture something of Kelly's timeless elegance and Khan's fabulous fierceness. See: a plum jersey day dress with a swingy ballet skirt that would make any gal sashay. The one misstep: the OTT glittery bustier ball gown at the end. RL

7 Foods to protect winter-ravaged skin

ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK

Nutrition. Eat your way to healthier skin.

All the moisturizer in the world can't hold up to what Mother Nature has been doling out these past few weeks. Besides treating your skin more gently — you're taking shorter showers, using mild soaps and patting yourself dry instead of rubbing, right? — you could be doing more to keep it looking and feeling healthy.

Drinking plenty of water is key since, between the harsh wind and moisture-sapping central heating, your skin is grappling with the extremes of both the indoors and outdoors. And cut out as much sugar as possible; besides making your metabolism yo-yo, it's aging you faster by interfering with collagen production. So keep green tea handy — besides keeping you hydrated, it's packed with catechins that boost blood flow — and add these foods to your diet to keep your cheeks rosy.

Guilt-free pleasure

Dark chocolate

Is there anything cocoa can't cure? Opt for dark chocolate that's at least 70 percent cacao — a German study found that the high concentration of flavanols helps thicken skin and boost hydration.

Olive oil

Whether it's the polyphenols keeping free radicals at bay or monounsaturated fatty acids lubricating skin from the inside out, a 2012 study found that women who ate more than 2 teaspoons a day showed over 30 percent fewer signs of aging. Look for the cold-pressed and extra virgin kind, which doesn't lose nutrients during processing.

Tomatoes

Besides the natural SPF-boosting lycopene (cook the fruit to get the most benefit), the selenium in tomatoes is an immune-booster that guards against skin damage and age spots.

Sardines

Give these little fish a try — their omega-3 content is similar to salmon, and those healthy fatty acids are working to keep skin supple by supporting elasticity.

Kale

As if kale needed another thing to add to its résumé. For your skin, it contains the powerful antioxidants lutein and zeaxanthin that eliminate free radicals. Bonus: Kale also contains vitamins C and skin-firming A.

EVA KIS
@thisiskis
eva.kis@metro.us

Vitamin C

Kiwi

They're packed with nearly twice as much vitamin C, pound for pound, as oranges, which boosts collagen production and is known to firm your skin and reduce dryness.

Zinc

Sunflower seeds

A teaspoonful on your salad is enough to get about a third of your daily vitamin E (which should already be part of your skin care routine). It also has zinc — both strengthen cell membranes for a smoother complexion.

Metro coverage ignores prominent winter sport

This may come as a shock to your sports writers, but there is another active sport other than baseball, football and basketball in the tristate area with two teams in playoff contention. For some reason, hockey coverage is passed over for ranting commentaries by your sports writers. After all, Amar'e Stoudemire's buyout, Bill Belichick's legacy, Phil Jackson's executive moves and interviews with Horace Grant (seriously? A player who never played for a New York team?), have been used in the sports section as opposed to the Rangers and Islanders. They both happened to play each other on Monday, fighting for playoff positioning. If the sports coverage is that slow, why bother having that section at all? Just wait until baseball season, or "gasp," the Stanley Cup playoffs where two New York teams might have a chance at winning something this year.

Bible doesn't advocate for veganism

Re: 'A healthy, holy diet' (Metro, Feb. 17) If you're considering whether the Bible endorses veganism, consider Romans 14: "One person's faith allows them to eat anything, but another, whose faith is weak, eats only vegetables." Consider the first chapter of Leviticus, wherein God instructs Moses in the ritual slaughter and fiery destruction of bulls. There are abundant medical and ethical reasons to forego meat without consulting an inconsistent, inaccurate collection of Bronze Age folk tales.

Sox betting 2015 staff will be chock full of iron men

MLB. The Red Sox currently don't have an ace on their pitching staff.

Clay Buchholz, Rick Porcello, Joe Kelly, Wade Miley and Justin Masterson — this will be the 2015 Red Sox starting rotation when the season starts in just over a month, with the glaring "issue" of there being no ace.

Unlike in past years with Jon Lester, Josh Beckett (in his prime), Curt Schilling, Pedro Martinez and all the way back to Roger Clemens, the Red Sox do not have a true No. 1 starter on their roster. Instead of having a dominant guy at the top of their rotation, they are valuing durability. As none of the five are true aces, the one commonality they share is that they are innings eaters.

Last season, three of the five current Red Sox starters pitched at least 170 innings, while Kelly and Masterson dealt with injuries. Of the three "iron men," Miley and Porcello each threw 200 or more innings, signaling that the Sox could have one of the more durable staffs in MLB. Porcello has thrown at least 176 innings in four straight seasons, while in his three years in the league, Miley has thrown at least 194 innings — eclipsing the 200-inning mark twice.

"The best predictor of future durability and performance is past durability and performance," Boston general manager Ben Cherington said when the Sox announced the signing of Miley to a three-year, $19.25 million deal. "When we traded for him, our full expectation was that he could be here for a while."

Between the five Red Sox starters, they own a combined 10 seasons of 180 or more innings thrown. Along with being durable, as a group they've also been consistent. The five starters have a lifetime ERA of 3.93, which is pretty respectable, all things considered.

Clearly, the strength of this year's club will be its lineup, with powerful bats in David Ortiz, Hanley Ramirez and Pablo Sandoval, to go along with quality hitters in Dustin Pedroia, Mike Napoli and up-and-coming stars Mookie Betts and Xander Bogaerts.

Having a lineup as strong as the Red Sox have, to go along with five starters that can be counted on to go six or seven innings every time they take to the mound, should be able to translate into wins.

No ace? No problem.

Made of Clay

The health of Clay Buchholz is always called into question.

- The 30-year-old righty pitched 170.1 innings in 2014, 108.1 in 2013 and a career high 189.1 innings in 2012. But Buchholz has three seasons on his record in which he didn't even crack 100.

Bruins with 'gimme' game against Oilers

The Bruins have been far from a well-oiled machine this season, but Edmonton takes the cake in NHL futility, owning a 16-32-10 record. The B's face the Oilers in Edmonton Wednesday (10 p.m., NESN).

NHL trade winds blowing hard

NHL. The league's trade deadline isn't until March 2, but the frenzy is underway.

Forget Valentine's Day if you want to see crazed, last-minute shopping. The NHL Trade Deadline is where that's at.

The sprint to the final reconstruction of NHL rosters began in earnest last week with three trades involving 13 players and three draft picks. Buffalo kicked off the trade season by signing off on two deals, the biggest of which was the acquisition of Evander Kane, Zach Bogosian and prospect goaltender Jason Kasdorf from Winnipeg for Tyler Myers, Drew Stafford, prospects Joel Armia and Brendan Lemieux, and a first-round pick in June's draft. The Sabres later added goalie Anders Lindback and a 2016 third-round pick from Dallas for Jhonas Enroth.

Those deals were the precursor to the four-player and draft-pick swap consummated by the Predators and Maple Leafs Sunday. Nashville acquired Cody Franson and Mike Santorelli. Toronto landed the Predators' first-round pick in June's draft, prospect wing Brendan Leipsic and UFA-to-be Olli Jokinen.

In a micro view, Nashville and Winnipeg are attempting to bolster their squads for the playoffs, while Buffalo and Toronto are in the midst of an organizational rebuild. In the macro view, though, the deals may cause the March 2 trade deadline to be underwhelming, especially when Marc Methot's four-year, $19.6 million extension with Ottawa Monday morning is factored in.

There's a chance the Devils' Jaromir Jagr could be on his seventh different NHL team in the coming days.
